Identified by Chambers USA as one of America’s leading lawyers for road safety regulation, enforcement and related litigation for several years, Erika Jones has been involved in most of the federal appellate cases involving federal motor vehicle safety regulations for the past two decades. She has personally argued cases in the Second, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh, Ninth and D.C. Circuits, and has briefed cases in the U.S. Supreme Court and other federal and state courts on issues related to federal motor vehicle safety regulations, including the extent of preemption. Erika’s practice was identified by Chambers USA as making Mayer Brown the “preeminent firm in road matters, particularly administrative law and litigation.”

SELECTED EXPERIENCE

Priester v. Ford Motor Co. (South Carolina)

Plaintiff brought a products liability action against Ford Motor Company, alleging that one of Ford’s pick-up trucks was defectively designed because it utilized tempered, rather than laminated, glass in the vehicle side windows.
